The Orator Who Nearly Lost His Pants In the September American Magazine appears the following about a delegate at the Baltimore convention who made a speech:

"The crowd listened approvingly to a frenzied speech from a Southwestern statesman who introduced an entirely new gesture. With his right hand outstretched he made wild clutches at his shoulder with his left hand thumb. It turned out that this was no mere affectation to emphasize his rhetoric, but that his 'galluses' were slipping. He remarked to a fellow delegate as he came down from the platform: 'I durn near lost my pants.'"

DREAMING

By J. E. FAWCETT

Just dreaming in the shadow of the honeysuckle vines,
That around the arbor its arms in beauty twines,
Dreaming of the summer time with its birds and flowers and bees:

Of the mocking birds singing in the sweet June apple trees.

Just sitting here dreaming with my head down on my hands
While my mind in fancy wanders back to boyhood sunny lands:

Back to the old log school house with its puncheons on the floor;

And the winter sun a shining through the wide cracks in the door,

Just dreaming of by-gone days in the happy long ago,
When my hands were not trembly and my step so short and stow:

How I used to go a fishing in the creek down by the mill,
Every Saturday evening, me and Tom and Joe and Bill.

Just sitting here dreaming of a girl I used to know,
With sparkling eyes and curly locks in the misty long ago,
Dreaming of the spelling match and the many husking bees
And the moonlight ramble homeward underneath the whispering trees.

Just sitting here dreaming of the woods I used to roam,
Watching the birds at mating time and the squirrels to their home.

Seems like to me 'twas yesterday but it has been many a day
Since a careless barefoot boy I spent the time in play.

Just sitting here dreaming while a tear steals in my eye,
Of my old home and mother and the happy days gone by,
When life was like a singing brook, a long and glad some song,
Dancing in the twilight shadows bright and happy all day long.

Just sitting here dreaming of that home beyond the sky,
Where we'll meet again some day in the future you and I,
Dreaming that no darkening shadow may rise that day to mar,
The passage of our trembling souls when we cross o'er the bar.

St. Charles has a city health officer, and should you know of any unclean premises that it dangerous to the public health, it is your duty to report the same to him.
